Jacques writes with honesty and candor about the challenges she faced growing up as a boy who didn't feel like one. She describes the pain and confusion of feeling trapped in the wrong body, and the years of therapy and self-discovery that led to her decision to transition.

Jacques' story is not just a personal narrative; it is also a meditation on the nature of gender and identity. She challenges traditional definitions of masculinity and femininity, and argues that gender is a fluid and subjective experience.

Trans is a groundbreaking and important memoir that will resonate with anyone who has ever questioned their gender or struggled with their identity. It is a story of hope, courage, and the indomitable human spirit.
